Submitted by the Substance Abuse Prevention Committee

Finance Committee has not made final recommendation.

Article 26 Explanation: If we want addiction destigmatized, we need a language that's unified because the words we use matter. In research findings, the word “abuse” was found to increase stigma, which can affect quality of care and act as a barrier to treatment-seeking in individuals suffering from addiction. Consequently, instead of describing someone as a “drug abuser,” it is less stigmatizing and more medically accurate to describe them as “a person with, or suffering from substance use disorder.”

Words matter and working to change the language around substance use disorders will help individuals identify less with negative terms and more with neutral terms around substance use. The language used by family, friends and community around substance use influence how individuals feel they are perceived and supported.

The broad use of stigmatizing language throughout the general population can generate biases that impact the effectiveness of public policies designed to address the public health crisis around substance use disorders. There is a pressing need to reduce the continued reinforcement of negative associations attributed to persons with substance use disorders. If we want addiction destigmatized we need a language that more accurately reflects the true nature of these conditions.
